

International Forum on Smart and Sustainable Buildings

INTRODUCTION

The world is facing two imminent issues, namely, global climatic change and depletion of natural resources. We are striving for a better environment with innovative technological solutions for energy saving and revival of natural resource, i.e. green-house-gases reduction, fresh water recycling, renewable energy etc. There has been a global consensus to address to these issues by the construction of sustainable and green cities built around the world to sustain the present and future generations.

Like most modernized cities, our building sectors in Macau, Hong Kong and Mainland China cities are facing challenges to comply with many stringent green building codes especially in energy saving policies and solutions for combating global warming issues. Professionals are required to follow the latest benchmarks from international to local green rating systems such as LEED, 3-Star, Green Mark, BEAM, etc., the yardsticks of which are weighted from different green measures on performance assessments. This full day CPD seminar provides the participants with a board view on the latest development of worldwide green rating systems, standards, green codes/ordinances for smart and sustainable buildings as well as prospects on professional certification and accreditation programs, i.e. LEED AP, GEES CP, BIAQ, etc.

This seminar is ideal for architects, project managers, facility managers, green building consultants, developers, sustainability coordinators, landscape architects, technical managers, energy engineers, MEP consultants, and anyone who are interesting in understanding more of the green and intelligent building criteria to further the green evolution.
